

IFAD and GEF

Working together to boost the development dividend

Balancing higher yields and incomes, healthy ecosystems, and empowered communities - these are some of the benefits for farmers in developing countries that come from the International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD) and the Global Environment Facility (GEF).

Working together since 2001, these joint projects and their impacts are highlighted in a new report The IFAD-GEF Advantage II: partnering for a sustainable world - pick up a copy at the IFAD stand or at www.ifad.org.

IFAD currently facilitates access for governments to GEF funding for 24 countries. IFAD has a pipeline of 32 GEF funded projects, with climate change as the dominant focal area, utilising a budget of approximately US$161 million.
